Everybody who has reached the age of forty-five needs glasses. No matter how healthy or perfectly the eyes may be, the lenses gradually harden until the fortieth or forty-fifth year, when they become far-sighted. Those who are able at forty-five to read fine print without glasses have always been slightly near-sighted without knowing it.

MARK TWAIN'S QUESTION

What Has God to be Thankful for?—Suggests a Few of the Things

Chicago, Nov. 28.—A dispatch to the Tribune from Washington, D. C., says: "Mark Twain," who took luncheon with President Roosevelt yesterday, gave the following Thanksgiving sentiment:

"Every year, every person in America concentrates all his thoughts upon one thing—cataloging his reasons for being thankful to the Deity for the blessings conferred upon the human race during the expiring 12 months.

"This is well, and as it should be; but it is too one-sided. No one ever seems to think of the Deity's side of it; apparently no one concerns himself to inquire how much or how little he has had to be thankful for during the same period.

"We may be unstintingly thankful, but can that really be the case with him. If he had voice how would he regard the year's results in Russia?

"Doubtless the most that he can be thankful for is that the carnage and sufferings are not as bad as they might be.

"He will have noticed that life insurance in New York has grown tolerably rotten, and the widow and orphan have had a sorrowful time of it as the hands of the chosen protectors. Doubtless the most he is thankful for is that the rottenness and robberies have not been absolutely complete.

"He has noticed the political smell ascending from New York, Philadelphia and 60 or 70 other municipalities has been modified a little temporarily, and doubtless is thankful for that transient reprieve.

"He has observed that King Leopold's destruction of innocent life on

EXTEND ROAD TO MADRAS

That Central Oregon will not be without a railroad long is shown by the following from the Madras Pioneer, concerning the movements of the Great Southern, which is now building southward from Dufur.

It certainly looks now as though the Great Southern railroad will be the first to build into Central Oregon and tap the rich grain district of this section of the state, says the Pioneer.

The present terminus of the road is Dufur, but there has been no cessation in the activities of the engineering department of the road, and it is announced that grade stakes are being set south of Dufur, and that the new contract for 22 miles of construction will be under way as soon as the cross-sections stakes are set.

President John Heinrichs has frequently declared that the road would not stop at Dufur, and there is every indication that the program will be carried out just as announced by him. On last Thursday, W. F. Nelson, the vice-president of the company and who had charge of the construction work, left Portland with a corps of 12 men who are going to the territory south of Dufur to take up the field work.

A conference was held at Tygh with a number of land owners of that section, and the right of way for the road is being obtained. In fact, it is definitely stated by those in authority that the right of way for the greater portion of the road has already been secured.

Engineers who have been over the route which will probably be taken by the Great Southern say that an easy grade can be had, and that the road will not be expensive in building.

The grade down Warm Springs river will be very light, and from the mouth of Warm Springs river on up the Deschutes to Willow creek and thence on up through this wheat district an easy grade without any heavy work can be obtained.

WALLA WALLA WATERS

Rights of Settlers to Use of Stream to be Determined in the Courts

A novel irrigation point, new to this state, though it has been before courts elsewhere, will be brought up in the great suits, involving millions of dollars, and to be heard by the Oregon and Washington courts. It is the question of water rights of interstate streams, and in this case it is the waters of the Walla Walla river, which flows from Oregon into Washington, that are in dispute. Two great irrigation companies, with millions of invested capital, operating on different sides of the state line, hundreds of settlers on individual land and the state of Oregon, as owner of the school lands, are parties to the litigation.

The final suit of the three was filed last week in Walla Walla by the Lowden Irrigation company, represented by C. M. Rader and Will R. King against the Walla Walla Irrigation company, owners of what is known as the Burlingame ditch, carrying water from the Walla Walla river to Gardens settlement. With the ditch company set about forty private persons, defendants and whose property is located in the states of Washington and Oregon. In Oregon there are two similar suits, one of which the Milton Ditch company is defendant.

The question the courts will have to decide is the rights of all parties to use the waters of the Walla Walla river, and by decree to apportion the different amount to the various parties interested. For the purpose of establishing the exact status of all litigants State Engineer Lewis has at work a large force of men making maps of the land involved, the course of the streams, and the amount of water in each. The maps will not be completed until next February, when the taking of testimony in the cases will commence.

ow has grown no less, nor his large circle of friends and acquaintances.

Prof. W. A. Wann came over from Monmouth today to spend Thanksgiving with his brother, W. B. Wann, in Yew Park. The professor will leave in a few days for Honolulu, where he goes to represent the Mutual Insurance Company.

Announcements have been received in this city of the marriage of Nellie McGee and Jerry Cramer, at Prineville, November 23. Miss McGee lived with her parents in Yew Park up to about one year ago, and was a well-known musician of the Capital City. The couple will make their future home at Madras, Crook county.
